

CURSECRAFT for Lease Announcement

Happy late New Year everyone, 🥳

There has been a lean toward releasing all the CurseCraft properties. (media, files, DNS, accounts, etc.) Released out to someone that would qualify to handle running an MC server including the media. This will be provided through a specified lease. This does not mean it will be officially sold and completely handed over. There will always be someone (Marcus) at the top to insure CurseCraft is secure. (And not turned into a sketchy pornographic ad site by a 12 year old or domains dispersed - like HugeDomains selling for over 2-3k again) Other than that, there will be NO interference with how things are handled during the leased term against those running specifically a MC server.

- This is somewhat similar to Kjweg and Curtis running the server for OMGCookies, but actually getting a real return for their efforts this time around.
- In regards to Hytale releasing, there will very likely be other defined oversight stepping in toward that likelihood which would be outlined and not interfering with the MC server.

In the coming month or two there would be a provided public form to fill out for those that want to submit a request toward taking lease over the CurseCraft server and properties included which will last for an undefined period of time until the right candidate is found. Any further professional business inquiries: support@cursecraft.net

- Anyone is welcome to submit a request if they feel they would be able to handle it or improve the status quo. It would be good start if you had connections or resources to advance the development and smooth out the transition to a release server. If you have suggestions on who would best handle the CurseCraft server, please notify me your suggestions. Also for any concerning comments on what is the most important aspects to you if the server is handed over to someone else, please state them. (Like previous ranks)
- Upon vetting and picking a candidate, all the needed development aspects I have listed in a doc (including the now broken MC Login Auth to the site + many others) that would be wise to get updated, provided I had the time, would be given to that person as well as go-to developer contacts. There is one talented prepaid plugin dev on stand-by for potential use of services. Xenforo dev is a bit more specific and may not be needed, alternatives may work just fine.
- Revenue made through the CurseCraft mc server will be in large if not complete favor of those running it. Decided over vetting form, interview and officially with a specific and clear lease contract.

Lastly, I apologize for however delayed (years) this kind of announcement has been, but given circumstances and more thought, here it is. Any feedback on this is greatly appreciated, till then.

Marcus
